Excerpt from 1970: A Vision of the Coming Age It was nineteen hundred and threescore and ten. Came the first to a merchant of rank in Japan. Saying Forward those teas as soon as you can. In two minutes returned, I will do as you say, But send me the Bibles you promised today. Buy for me, said a lady in Boston, in haste, To a dear Cuban friend, (I trust to your taste); A barrel of oranges, fresh from the tree, A dozen pine-apples, the fairest you see, Two bunches of large, ripe bananas a cask Of the best of preserves - tis all that I ask, And a few limes or lemons - smooth, juicy and bright, In time to prepare for my party to-night. In halt an hour came, propelled through the air, The fruits and the sweets packed with exquisite care. And the fair one, delighted, sent word to each friend Far or near, a long sociable evening to spend. Methought that they came by balloon or by rail, By the pneumatic tube, by steam or by...
