These facts are also circumstances of evidence which rebut the presumption that the deed was intended as an absolute gift of the land, and leave the transaction to be determined without being governed by such presumption. Rankin was importuned by his wife to have this title conveyed to her. His testimony is that he did so upon her pledge that the title should be held by her for him and the family, and that the place was to be a home for them. Whether this is competent or not, no testimony is needed other than the admitted circumstances to show the nature of the transaction. He was dealing with his wife, the mother of his many children, with whom he was then living agreeably. No greater or higher relation of trust or confidence exists than this, and the rules of equity with regard to such relations, and which place the burden of showing that no trust was intended upon the party claiming a gift, are in my opinion upon careful examination applicable to this case. It a person obtains the legal title to property by such acts or circumstances of circumvention, imposition or fraud, or if he obtains it by virtue of a confidential relation and influence under such circumstances that he ought not, according to the rules of equity and good conscience as administered in chancery, to hold and enjoy the beneficial interest of...
