Overlooking Ave Maria Lane is a large show-room, in which the books bound in leather bindings are The Oxford Press, New York. displayed. Punch a few weeks ago described the University Press as the House Beautiful of Books. There is also a reading-room provided for the use of members of the Universities, schoolmasters and others interested in education, where all the publications of the University can be seen. It may be added that there is a similar reading-room at the Edinburgh depot at 12 Frederick Street. Some forty years have passed since the London representatives of the Oxford University Press first sent a traveller to the United States, with the result that, two years later, an agency was established in New York. The growth of the business was...
